

MRS. GIBSON WILL DEFEND HER STORY

To Face Neighbor Who Says "Pig Woman" Did Not See Hall-Mills Murder

MOTT SPEEDING UP PLANS

New Brunswick, N. J., Nov. 13.—Mrs. Jane Gibson, the "Pig Woman," will today confront a new witness who has declared Mrs. Gibson could not have seen the Hall-Mills murder committed, as the "Pig Woman" spent the evening of September 14 with her.

The meeting was arranged by the authorities in order that Mrs. Gibson may have a chance to refute the statements attacking her veracity. Mrs. Gibson, the star witness for the State, is eager for the ordeal.

The new witness is Mrs. Nellie L. Russell, a neighbor of Mrs. Gibson, and she asserts the "Pig Woman" was with her the night of the murder, at the very time Mrs. Gibson has sworn she saw the victim and Mrs. Mills killed.

Mrs. Gibson and Mrs. Russell had a physical encounter yesterday during a quarrel over a pig. Mrs. Russell today asserted she was not the aggressor. She added she harbored no ill will against Mrs. Gibson.

Mrs. Russell is a Negroess. She has made a statement to her story, which she told first to Timothy N. Pfeiffer, counsel for Mrs. Frances Storer Hall, widow of the victim, and Mr. Pfeiffer brought it to the attention of Mr. Mott. In consequence Mr. Mott changed all his plans and went to Somerset today.

The investigators have little reason to believe the Russian affidavit, Detective Patton, of Somerset County, said he believed it was inspired by ill feeling against the "pig woman."

Early this morning, Totten said, the authorities received an anonymous telephone call stating that something was wrong at the little farm. Mrs. Russell, who lives on the farm, found two cows dead and two other cows and a number of pigs starving and neglected.

It was first intended to arrest Mrs. Russell, who was taken to New York City, but the case was dropped after Mrs. Russell was warned. Totten said Mrs. Russell believed Mrs. Gibson was the informant.

CROWD HEARS WILSON SPEAK

Woodrow Wilson, former President, addressed a throng at his Washington home on Armistice Day. He is shown here as he appeared in the doorway and faced the crowd of "volunteers" who heard him deliver his first public speech since he became ill, three years ago. He appeared to have regained some of his vigor.

NO POISON FOUND IN SECOND CAKE

Authorities Convinced Package Sent U. of P. Man Was Intended as "Joke"

NEW STERRETT CASE CLUE

A foolish attempt at a practical joke instead of another poison cake similar to the one which killed W. W. Sterrett, of Devon, was the conclusion reached by authorities after an analysis of the cake received Saturday by Stewart Patterson, of Devon. The cake was a University of Pennsylvania student.

The second cake, sent by parcel post and postmarked Broad Street Station, this city, was free from poison, a chemist reported today. W. Butler Windle, District Attorney of Chester County, said the parcel came through the Devon postoffice, and was handled by Miss Margaret Gilles, the postmistress, who had handed the cake to the student, a week ago to Mrs. Sterrett. The latter was made ill by the poisoned confection and her husband, a public accountant, died less than fifty hours after eating part of it.

Need for the sender of the murder cake led Postoffice Inspector Simpson to Youngstown, O., today. He wants to locate a woman said to be a friend of Mrs. Sterrett and who visited the Sterretts when the accountant and his wife were in New York City.

Conner, Nevelle, of Montgomery County, who is to hold the inquest into the death of the Devon accountant, said today that he is ready whenever Major Windle sees fit to move. Mrs. Sterrett is not in condition to leave her Devon home, however. It was said this morning, and the coroner will await the report of Dr. Della Williams, the Sterrett family physician.

Police seized a package Sunday, with curiosity seekers at the Sterrett home. State police said, and an extra detail of officers was on hand all day to prevent Mrs. Sterrett from being annoyed.

Ulster facilities to make some other use of grapes than turning them into wine. "Sunday is the great drink day," the Misses said. "It is the crime day, the danger day."

Ulster vines are playing havoc in Ireland. Five hundred and ten thousand acres of vineyards are being planted and are living on license. Thirty-nine per cent of the people voted no license at the last election.

The convention formally opened by Miss Ann Gordon, vice president of the world organization. A feature of the opening was the presentation to her by Mrs. John Macdonald, a woman of Australia.

It was pointed out that the Minister to the United States from Uruguay was on her way to the convention as a delegate from that country was made public during the morning. She had been called from her government and was making the journey from Uruguay to Philadelphia from far-off lands furnished by the home delegates.

Much of interest was centered in the Rev. and Mrs. Arthur Macdonald, of Australia, all of Australia, Ceylon.

Mrs. Macdonald is dark-skinned and wore the pale yellow dress of the native. Her husband was in an ordinary black frock coat suit. They both expressed pleasure at America's strides for prohibition.

Mrs. Macdonald, who in his native land is a school professor, wore an orange turban. His Eastern suit was of black satin with cuffs and embroidered rose-colored vest.

"It took me two months to come," he said, his white teeth flashing, a smile contrasting vividly with his dark skin. "But it was worth it. I think your prohibition is a narrow escape. We have nothing like it where we come from."

FRELINGHUYSEN MAJORITY IN CAMDEN ONLY 1651

Republican Congress and County Nominees Had Good Leads

Official count of the results of Tuesday's election in Camden County, announced today, was more surprising to political leaders even than the unofficial results announced Tuesday night.

Senator Frelinghuysen's majority over Governor Edwards, which was expected to be at least 10,000, was only 1651. Voters cut heads of the ticket to a remarkable extent, but for Congress and county offices the Republicans received substantial majorities.

Congressman Patterson defeated his Democratic opponent in the County seat, while for Superior, Roosevelt, a Republican, defeated a Democrat.

In the city of Camden, King's majority for Mayor over Van Hart, Republican, was 1,651. Her husband, Van Hart, was expected to win by at least 5,000. The official count was as follows:

For United States Senator—Frelinghuysen, 27,502; Edwards, 26,211. For Superior—Roosevelt, 10,571; Roosevelt, 10,250.

The majority vote in the city of Camden was: King, Democrat, 14,358; Van Hart, Republican, 14,190. King's majority, 168.

The Fourteenth was the only ward in Camden which gave a majority to all Democratic candidates.

COURT ACTION HINTED AGAINST FAIR IN PARK

N. Phila. Manufacturers' Body Calls Fairmount Closing Illegal

An intimation that court action may be taken by the North Philadelphia Manufacturers' Association to prevent the Sequel-Centennial Exposition from being held in Fairmount Park is contained in a letter addressed to the Park Commissioners by the association.

In the letter the association suggested that it would not be legal to close the park to the public and admit only those who pay an admission charge. An opinion from the commissioners on this point was asked for.

A statement accompanying the letter when it was made public said commissioners had ignored this question in their reply. The reply said, however, that the park was open to the public and that the association was not to be allowed to close the park to the public and admit only those who pay an admission charge.
